Alf Mattison (1868-1944) was a photographer, local historian and socialist. Born at Hunslet, he grew up with a passion for Leeds' history. As a photographer he made a significant contribution to local history by recording numerous old buildings before they were demolished. He also published articles and photographs in the Yorkshire Daily Observer and absorbed many of these into his 1901 publication, The Romance of Old Leeds. Mattison was a passionate supporter of the Labour Party and the Independent Labour Party. He worked for the city tramways, where he was known affectionately as 'Old Leeds'. Mattison died as a result of a street accident in 1944.

This research guide lists the full collection of Mattison's historical and personal writings which were bequeathed to Leeds Central Library. His comprehensive library, including scarce socialist newspapers, an extensive range of pamphlets, and books on the Labour Party and the Independent Labour Party, are now held in the Special Collections of the Brotherton Library, alongside additional archival materials. You can read more about the University of Leeds collection here:
