Census Records

The Local and Family History Department has microfilm copies of the census returns for the whole of Yorkshire for 1841-1901, as well as access to all England and Wales census returns 1841-1921 via Ancestry.com.

About the Census

The UK census is a survey of the population that takes place every ten years. When the practice began in 1801, only headcount numbers for use in statistical data were recorded. It wasn't until 1841 that the government decided to collect personal information, sending census enumerators to every household to take down the name, age, occupation and birthplace of every man, woman and child in the country. Since then, the information collected has become more detailed (see table, right).

Information collected is intended to be kept confidential for 100 years. The easiest way to view census records is via Ancestry.com, which allows you to simply search using a person's name.

The Census on Microfilm

We also have the census returns for Yorkshire on microfilm for 1841-1901, which is useful if you prefer to start with a street address and check its residency, or look through all the addresses in a given area. To pinpoint the right place on the films, you'll first need to find out piece and folio numbers from a census index (staff can help with this if you're not sure how to go about this).

The Leeds section of the West Yorkshire Archive Service holds the originals of the only surviving pre-1841 returns for Leeds, the incomplete Leeds township census for 1801, Farsley for 1811, and Yeadon for 1811, 1821 and 1831. A search of these returns may be obtained by contacting the archives directly.

The Local and Family History Library has a microfilm copy of the 1801 township census and a transcript copy for Calverley and Farsley and Yeadon ones, as listed above.
